 ProPublica: Diversion Programs Say They Offer a Path Away From Court, but Critics Say the Tolls Are Hefty propublica.org/article/divers...

Through Freedom of Information Act requests, ProPublica Illinois obtained contracts, program reports and internal communications from more than 30 state's attorney's offices in Illinois that contract with CorrectiveSolutions, Victim Services or BounceBack. The records suggest that there is little oversight of the programs, although the companies dispute that, and that the programs often generate more money for the companies than for prosecutors' offices.

Emails obtained through a Freedom of Information Act request show other people suspected of writing bad checks also called the Macon County State's Attorney's Office to complain about being placed in a diversion program.

According to program reports obtained through an open records request, 3,094 cases had been referred to St. Clair County's Offender Accountability Program between April 2012 and June 2018, and offenders had completed diversion in 1,342 of those cases, or about 43 percent of them. Yet when asked how many of the hundreds of offenders were prosecuted after failing to complete diversion or never enrolling, the state's attorney's office provided a list of only 11 cases.

Through an open records request, ProPublica Illinois obtained the 50-page workbook used for courses from CorrectiveSolutions from St. Clair County, which covers offenses ranging from driving on a suspended license to domestic battery.
